The River Boat Comes and Goes

Judge Porter and Wife

Among Passengers Coming Down

The stern-wheel river boat, Port Simpson, came down river Tuesday and left again this morning on her last trip of this season.

Among the passengers coming down from Telegraph were Judge Porter and wife. Judge Porter will be remembered by old timers as one of the first discoverers of the Cassiar District. He has been connected with the Dominion government for many years. This summer he was pensioned by the government and his successor J. Cartmill, went up on the first trip of the Port Simpson.

Judge Porter and wife are both pleased to get to the coast and salt water again, this being their first trip outside in four years.

If you want a crab, go to Denney's.

Queen's Last Trip

The Pacific Coast Steamship Company's excursion steamer, Queen, was in Wrangell last Friday on her last trip of the season. While at Wrangell the townests enjoyed a dance in the Wrangell Hotel sample room.

The last trip of the Queen marks the close of one of the most delightful tourist seasons experienced. The weather conditions have been exceptionally good. The seasons success was marred only by the Spokane wreck on June 29th. The eyes of North America are on Alaska and a greater number of tourists is predicted for next season.

Forest Supervisor Calls

W. G. Weigle, the Forest Supervisor, and W. A. Langille, who recently resigned that position came to Wrangell Monday on the Forest Service boat Tahiti. After concluding their business here they left for headquarters at Ketchikan.

Wrangell Grows

New Buildings Rapidly

Taking Place of Old

One of the truest signs of a healthy city is the steady increase in number of residences, while the inactivity along building lines is as sure a sign of stagnation. Since April many cottages have been finished or started and this week three more are to be gotten under way.

"Marshall" Grant, who recently bought a lot of John Bardsell, is cleaning off the place in preparation for building a residence. Monday morning, J. G. Grant put a crew of men on a new cottage on 2nd St.

John Schuler, who recently sold his residence to Mr. Lawrance, will have a cottage built and ready for occupancy in about three weeks.

All the cottages available are rented and the supply hardly equals the demand. With such a record, can anyone truly say that Wrangell does not grow?

Work Progresses

On Water System

If no unexpected hard-luck hampers the work of N. L. Moen's crew who are putting in the water main extension, the work will be brought to a finish by Saturday evening. Some trouble has been experienced from poor pieces of pipe causing leaks but as the City Council has plenty of good pipe on hand, no great delay is expected.

The worst leak in the reservoir was repaired last Saturday. Thirty seven sacks of concrete were necessary to do the work but the water commenced to raise immediately. Previous to the mending of the leak the water fell five inches per day. From the time the leak was repaired Saturday, to Monday morning, the water raised about one inch. Other minor leaks are being repaired by the sawmill people in exchange for city water for their plant, their private water supply having given out on account of the extremely dry weather.

With the week places in the dam repaired, no water famine is possible as there is plenty of water running into the reservoir.

F. M. Jackson, operator on the Dominion Government telegraph line came down on the Port Simpson on his way to England. Mr. Jackson has been inside for fifteen years.

Lieutenant Emerson, Spanish war veteran, close friend of Theodore Roosevelt, and an authority on baskets and other Indian manufactures, has been stopping in Wrangell a few days.

Wabash Expected

While in port Sunday, Admiral Jackson, of the Flagship Redwing, of the Irish Mosquito Fleet, reported that the good ship Wabash left Santa Ana Saturday bound for Wrangell but owing to a slight head wind would not make port in the usual three days run.

Although she has not yet been sighted, she is expected to be in most any week as she is now about three days overdue.

A Witty Reply.

On one occasion an important dress rehearsal at His Majesty's theater was prolonged until the small hours of the morning. The company grew very weary, particularly a gentleman who had been with Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree in a good many productions, but who had never attained to more than a very tiny part. When the time came to rehearse his few lines he was so tired that his voice was anything but distinct.

"What's the matter, Mr. Z?" asked Sir Herbert in his most sarcastic tones. "Are you saving your voice for the rehearsal?"

"No, Sir Herbert," was the retort. "I've never been able to save anything under your management."

Sir Herbert, an exceedingly witty man himself, was so pleased with the retort that the salary of the small part man was raised.—London M. A. P.

Notable Party Stops At

Wrangell Saturday

Secretary of the Interior, Fischer and Governor Walter E. Clark, were among the notable passengers who stopped at Wrangell Saturday evening.

While here, a public meeting was held and the Secretary and Governor were interviewed by many interested parties of this place.

The tourists and townpeople mingled in having a good time at an impromptu ball at the Wrangell Hotel.

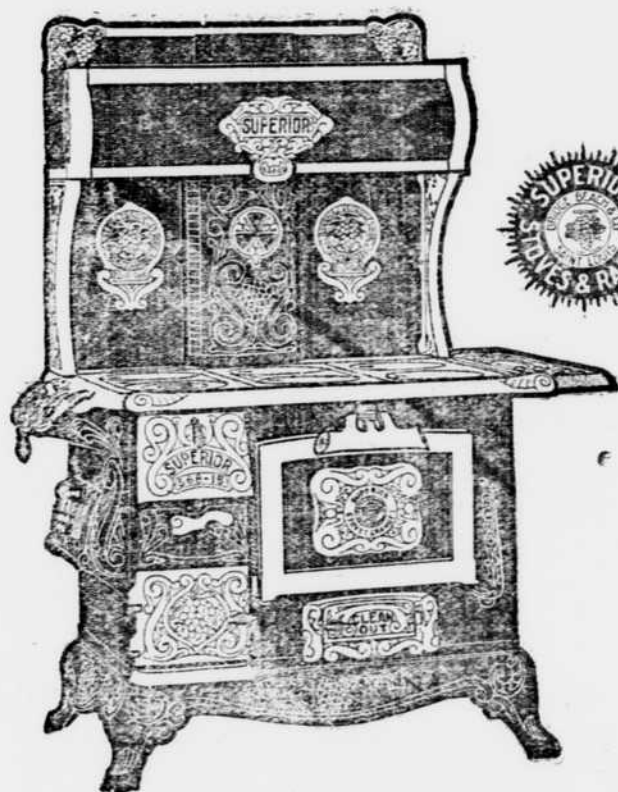

Strictly Business.

Boy Scouts Trip To Glacier Lake

By Weston Dalgetty

After the excitement had cooled down we put up our lunch and started for the glacier.

We rowed up on the left side of the lake and then crossed over and landed on the right side of the glacier.

After looking around from the top of the hill we boys went down to the face of the glacier and threw rocks in the water.

We were beginning to get tired of this when Captain Johansen motioned from the other side of the hill, to come to him and see some ground hogs that were playing on the rocks a short distance from him. He was going to shoot one for us but they had disappeared.

After this we went over on the snowslide and had a snow ball fight.

From this slide we had a fine view of the glacier as it looked farther up the canyon. I was surprised at the colors in it. The end of the glacier was covered with mud and large boulders but up farther it was not that way. The ice at this place was sky blue with a very little pink mixed in. But the cracks were a very dark blue.

After seeing everything that we thought worth seeing and letting Mr. Corser snap us a number of times with a ground hog which the Captain finally managed to shoot. We got into the boats and rowed back to camp where we had a dinner of pork and beans and then went across the slough to gather flowers. Two or three with Mr. Corser gathered flowers and the rest of us ran races and played games until it was time to go back to camp for supper.

For supper the main course was flapjacks and they were dandies too. This I know because I was one of the cooks, but the rest of fellows were jealous and said they were punk. But I noticed that we couldn't cook them fast enough and more than one brave Scout, his face smeared with syrup, stuck out his plate to me and said, "Kin I have the next ones, kid."

After supper everything was packed up and loaded into the boats, after which a large fire was built, a watermelon was cut and everybody sat down to eat and tell stories.

After listening rather impatiently to a number of short stories about watermelons the Captain began to tell about his bear again and wound up by telling us about Wabash Bill's encounter with a bear. Then Mr. Corser told us a story, which he said before starting, was the absolute truth. It ran something like this: "Bill the Red," I suppose you have all heard of him? No? Well he was a great hunter and trapper. One day he was coming out of his tent with a large hunting knife in his hand, with which he had just skinned a bear, when he met a large grizzly coming around the corner of the tent. The bear saw him and came for him and Bill seeing there was no other way out of it, rushed at the brute with the knife high in the air, and plunged it into the beast's breast, touching the heart. The bear hugged him until he was unconscious and when he came to he found himself in the clutches of a dead bear. Of course this man did not suffer the way Wabash did."

"My that was a bad thing for Bill," said the Captain.

"Gosh," came in awed tones from the boys.

"Oh! hee, hee, ho, ho," giggled Mr. Corser, holding his sides, and almost breaking the box he was sitting on, in his delight. "hee, hee, I just made that up."

"What!" shouted the Captain. "aint that the truth," and he almost jumped into the fire so great was his disgust.

After that nobody seemed able to say a word and so we got into the boats and rowed down to the Duckland, made our beds on the floor of her cabin, and after a fierce battle with the misquitos, which lasted for several hours, we fell asleep and knew no more till we were awakened the next morning at six o'clock by our brave Captain and chief hunter.

After breakfast the Duckland's engine was started and we were off for the hot springs. We ran into the main river and anchored while the Captain went out in the small boat and found a channel through which the Duckland could pass. Again the engine was started and we made our way up the river to the opening of another big slough and tied up to some willows on the right hand side.

After putting up some lunch we took the small boats and started up the slough.

"Now," said the Captain, after several minutes of silence, "there is a very small slough through which we have to pass to get to the hot springs. I am not sure of finding this slough, so you had better keep a sharp lookout."

After some difficulty we found the right slough and went into it. Here was some more trouble, for instead of one slough we found two sloughs which joined together and formed the one we were in. We did not know which one to take to get to the springs. We finally decided to try the larger of the two.

We met with no success in this slough so the Captain went ashore to hunt for the springs while the rest of us, excepting Mr. Corser, went in swimming.

Almost before the last of us had finished dressing, we heard a shout and around a bend came the Captain in a leaky little dugout which almost sank with his weight.

After he had gotten safely out of the little canoe, he told us that he had found the springs, and that we were in the wrong slough, and that he was hungry.

We tied the two boats together and ate lunch, after which we rowed into the other slough, tied the boats to the bank and took the trail through the woods to the springs.

The first thing I saw upon coming out to a cleared spot was two buildings. One a dwelling house and the other a bath house. Upon going behind the bath house I saw a trough of running water that went into the building. The water looked nice and cold but I found upon sticking my hand in it that it was hot, yes, very hot.

In the bathhouse were two wooden bathtubs, both of which were filled.

Mr. Corser suggested a sponge bath, the water being too hot to allow anyone to get into the tub.

For answer we all, with the exception of the Captain, started to undress, and were soon inside having a good bath. As for Mr. Corser, I don't believe I ever saw him so happy. He gurgled like a baby all the time and we almost had to use force to get him out of there. After the bath we went back to the boats and rowed down to the Duckland.

We decided to go down to Andrew's cabin and eat supper ashore so the engine was set to work and in a short time we tied up in front of the cabin.

After the grub had been set ashore we went up a slough in the small boats, in search of wood.

The supper that night was a dandy. We cooked about everything we had and again the chief food was flapjacks.

After supper was over and the dishes washed and what was left of the food was put back on the Duckland, we started down the river for Wrangell.

We seemed to fly down the river for we had the strong current with us.

A little while after we started from Andrew's place I laid out my blankets on the floor and then went out on deck. After a first glance around I took a closer look and then almost fell over-board in astonishment. For instead of being up in the river as I thought, we were past Cottonwood Island and half way over the flats.

The boys on deck were already trying to decide whether to go home and sleep or to stay aboard the boat. But they should have saved their words for even while they were arguing, the Duckland ran gently into a sand bar and stuck.

The anchor was dropped and everyone turned in, and after talking about authors and stories for awhile, we dropped off to sleep. I
